

Job 9:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then Job answered and said,

Analysis

Job responds to Bildad with weary acknowledgment: 'Then Job answered and said.' This introduces Job's longest speech thus far (chapters 9-10), where he wrestles with divine sovereignty and justice. Unlike his earlier laments (chapters 3, 6-7), this response engages directly with his friends' theology. Job will affirm God's power and sovereignty while questioning whether these attributes ensure justice as Bildad assumes.

The literary structure signals intensification—Job moves from personal lament to theological wrestling. He doesn't deny God's power or justice in principle but questions how humans can vindicate themselves before an all-powerful God who seems to have turned against them. This sets up the book's central problem: how can mortals be just before God? (verse 2)—a question Romans 3-5 will ultimately answer through Christ's righteousness imputed to believers.

Job's response demonstrates mature faith that questions without rejecting God. Unlike simplistic 'don't question God' pietism, Scripture models honest wrestling with hard providence. Job's questions aren't rebellion but faith seeking understanding—the pattern of biblical lament (Psalms 13, 22, 73, 88). The Reformed tradition affirms that genuine faith asks hard questions while maintaining trust in God's ultimate goodness and wisdom.

Historical Context

The dialogue structure follows ancient Near Eastern wisdom disputation format, where sages debated theological and philosophical questions. Job's speeches grow longer and more complex as the dialogue progresses, reflecting escalating frustration with his friends' inadequate theology and increasing desperation to understand God's purposes.

Related Passages

1 John 4:8 — God is love

1 Corinthians 13:4 — Characteristics of love

Study Questions

1. How do we distinguish between faithful questioning that seeks understanding versus faithless questioning that demands God justify Himself?
2. What does Job's willingness to engage theological argument despite suffering teach about the relationship between faith and reason?
3. In what ways does Job's honest wrestling with divine providence model healthy spiritual maturity versus superficial piety?

Interlinear Text

וַיַּעַן	אֵיּוֹב	וַיֹּאמֶר:
answered	Then Job	and said
H6030	H347	H559

From KJV Study • kjevstudy.org