

Job 9:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

They are passed away as the swift ships: as the eagle that hasteth to the prey.

Analysis

They are passed away as the swift ships (חָלְפוּ עַם־אֲנִיּוֹת אֲבָה, chalf'u im-oniyyot eveh)—Job employs two vivid metaphors for life's rapid passage. The 'swift ships' (likely papyrus reed boats used on the Nile or Jordan) were lightweight and extremely fast. The verb 'passed away' (chalaph, חָלַף) means to pass on, change, or vanish—the same word used of watches in the night that disappear (Psalm 90:4).

As the eagle that hasteth to the prey (כְּנֶשֶׁר יָטוּשׁ עַל־אֶכְלָה, k'nesher yatush alei-okhel) completes the imagery. The eagle or vulture (nesher, נֶשֶׁר) stooping to carrion exemplifies speed and inevitability. The verb 'hasteth' (tush, יָטוּשׁ) means to dart or swoop down. Job sees his days swooping toward death as inexorably as a raptor strikes prey. These three metaphors (runner, ship, eagle) emphasize acceleration—life doesn't merely pass but accelerates toward its end.

Historical Context

Reed boats (papyrus vessels) were common in Egypt and could achieve remarkable speeds with skilled sailors. Egyptian tomb paintings depict these swift craft used for hunting and travel. Eagles and vultures in the ancient Near East were noted for their spectacular hunting dives, reaching speeds over 100 mph. Job, living in the patriarchal period, would have observed both phenomena. This verse reflects universal human consciousness of mortality heightened by suffering.
