

John 1:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace.

Analysis

Believers testify: 'of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace' (charin anti charitos). The word 'pleroma' (fullness) indicates Christ possesses complete divine attributes and blessings. From this inexhaustible reservoir, believers continuously receive. The phrase 'charin anti charitos' is debated: 'grace upon grace' (accumulating grace), 'grace replacing grace' (new covenant replacing old), or 'grace corresponding to grace' (Christ's grace matched to our need). Whatever the precise meaning, the emphasis is on abundant, continuous, overflowing grace from Christ's inexhaustible fullness.

Historical Context

Paul would later develop 'fullness' theology extensively (Colossians 1:19, 2:9). Early believers experienced ongoing grace—not merely initial forgiveness but daily provision. The phrase may also contrast the giving of the law through Moses (verse 17) with the greater grace through Christ—one gracious dispensation replaced by another, fuller one.
