

John 11:24

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day.

Analysis

Martha affirms orthodox Jewish belief in future resurrection at the last day, based on Daniel 12:2 and Pharisaic teaching. Her theology is sound but incomplete—she expects distant future fulfillment, not present reality. This reveals how correct doctrine can miss Christ's immediate power. Jesus doesn't correct her theology but transcends it. Her statement sets up Jesus' revolutionary self-identification (v. 25), showing how Old Testament hope finds fulfillment in His person.

Historical Context

The 'last day' was Pharisaic terminology for the final resurrection at Messiah's coming. Martha's confession shows her orthodox Jewish faith background and theological education.

Study Questions

1. How can correct theology become inadequate when it misses Christ's present power?

2. In what ways do we relegate God's promises to distant future instead of present faith?
3. What does Martha's orthodox belief teach about the relationship between sound doctrine and personal faith?
