

John 13:21

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

When Jesus had thus said, he was troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me.

Analysis

When Jesus had thus said, he was troubled in spirit (ἐταράχθη τῷ πνεύματι, etarachthē tō pneumati)—Jesus experiences deep emotional distress. The passive verb suggests both external circumstances and internal wrestling. This is genuine humanity; the Word made flesh feels anguish at impending betrayal. Earlier Jesus was "troubled in spirit" at Lazarus' tomb (11:33); here betrayal by an intimate friend causes spiritual turmoil.

And testified (ἐμαρτύρησεν, emarturēsen)—solemn witness. Verily, verily marks authoritative pronouncement. One of you shall betray me (παραδώσει με, paradōsei me)—"betray" literally means "hand over." Jesus knows which disciple will deliver Him to death yet has broken bread with him. The phrase "one of you" emphasizes proximity and intimacy—not an outsider but an insider commits treachery. This fulfills Psalm 41:9, "mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me."

Historical Context

Betrayal by table companions violated ancient Near Eastern hospitality sacred bonds. Sharing bread created covenant loyalty obligations. Judas' betrayal was cultural sacrilege compounding moral evil. John writes to assure Christians that Jesus knowingly went to the cross—not caught by surprise but sovereignly orchestrating redemption through even the betrayer's treachery.
