

John 14:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

Analysis

Jesus identifies the Comforter: 'But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name' (ho de parakletos, to pneuma to hagion, ho pempsei ho pater en to onomati mou). The Father sends the Spirit 'in Jesus' name' - meaning by Jesus' authority and to glorify Him. The Spirit's ministry follows: 'he shall teach you all things' (ekeinos didaxei hymas panta). The pronoun ekeinos (that one) emphasizes the Spirit as personal agent, not mere force. The comprehensive panta (all things) indicates complete instruction in truth. The Spirit will also 'bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you' (hypomneses hymas panta ha eipon hymin). The verb hypomimnesko means to remind, to bring to mind. This promise assured apostles that the Spirit would enable accurate transmission of Jesus' teaching - foundational for New Testament formation.

Historical Context

This verse provided crucial foundation for apostolic authority and New Testament canonization. The Spirit's promise to remind disciples of Jesus' words assured the church that apostolic testimony was reliable. Early church debates about which writings were authoritative appealed to apostolic authorship authenticated by Spirit-inspiration. Church Fathers distinguished apostolic teaching from later speculations based on this verse. Pentecost's gift of tongues (Acts 2) demonstrated Spirit-empowerment for witness. Throughout church history, this verse has validated Spirit-illumination while preventing subjective individualism - the Spirit does not contradict but illuminates Christ's revelation. Reformation sola scriptura relied on this: Scripture is sufficient because Spirit-inspired and Spirit-illuminated. Modern debates about ongoing revelation must account for this verse - the Spirit's teaching brings to remembrance Christ's words rather than adding new revelation independent of Scripture.
