

John 16:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But now I go my way to him that sent me; and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?

Analysis

I go my way to him that sent me (ὑπάγω πρὸς τὸν πέμψαντά με, hypagō pros ton pemsanta me)—the present tense hypagō (I am going) emphasizes the immediacy and certainty of Jesus's departure via cross, resurrection, and ascension. The Father is consistently described as 'the one having sent me' (perfect participle pemsanta), underscoring Christ's mission and divine origin.

None of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?—Peter had asked this earlier (13:36), but now grief has silenced inquiry. Jesus gently rebukes their self-absorbed sorrow: instead of asking about His destination and purpose, they're consumed with their own loss. True discipleship requires looking beyond personal discomfort to Christ's glory and sovereign purposes. His 'going' was not tragedy but triumph—returning to the Father who sent Him.

Historical Context

This occurs chronologically after Peter's earlier question in John 13:36 ('Lord, whither goest thou?'). Hours had passed, and the disciples' initial curiosity had given way to overwhelming grief. Jesus was preparing them to understand that His departure—through crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension—was not defeat but the necessary path to Pentecost and the Spirit's coming.
