

John 17:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves.

Analysis

And now come I to thee—Jesus speaks of His imminent return to the Father through crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension. The Greek erchomai pros se (ἔρχομαι πρὸς σέ) marks the transition from earthly ministry to heavenly glory, yet He prays these things...in the world (ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ λαλῶ) precisely so His disciples might hear.

That they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves (ἴνα ἔχωσιν τὴν χαρὰν τὴν ἐμὴν πεπληρωμένην ἐν ἐαυτοῖς)—The purpose clause is stunning: Christ's joy (charan tēn emēn), the very joy He possesses in perfect communion with the Father (cf. 15:11, 16:24), is to be fulfilled (peplērōmenēn, perfect passive participle—fully completed, brought to maturity) within believers. This joy doesn't depend on circumstances but flows from the believer's union with Christ and knowledge of answered prayer (17:1-5). Jesus prays aloud so His followers would know their security in God's love and mission.

Historical Context

This verse occurs in Jesus's High Priestly Prayer (John 17), offered on the night before His crucifixion (c. AD 30). John's Gospel uniquely preserves this intimate prayer, likely overheard by the disciples in the upper room or en route to Gethsemane. The prayer's theological depth reflects John's mature meditation on Christ's person and work, written decades later (c. AD 90-95).

Study Questions

1. How does knowing that Jesus prayed for your joy—even on the night of His betrayal—change your understanding of His priorities?
2. What is the relationship between Christ's joy and your own? How does union with Christ become the source of joy that circumstances cannot steal?
