

John 20:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For as yet they knew not the scripture, that he must rise again from the dead.

Analysis

For as yet they knew not the scripture (οὐδέπω γὰρ ᾔδεισαν τὴν γραφήν, oudepō gar ēdeisan tēn graphēn)—the pluperfect tense looks back from post-resurrection perspective: they had not yet known. 'The scripture' (singular) likely refers to a specific text, perhaps Psalm 16:10 ('thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption') or Isaiah 53:10-12, rather than Scripture generally.

That he must rise again from the dead (ὅτι δεῖ αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῆναι, hoti dei auton ek nekrōn anastēnai)—the divine necessity (δεῖ, dei, 'must') shows resurrection wasn't accident but fulfillment. John wrote this verse decades later, after the church had connected resurrection to specific OT prophecies. The disciples' initial ignorance proves resurrection faith wasn't manufactured from proof-texts—they believed first, understood Scripture second, inverting typical apologetic order.

Historical Context

First-century Judaism had varied views on resurrection: Pharisees affirmed it, Sadducees denied it, but none expected Messiah to rise individually before the general resurrection. Jesus had predicted his resurrection repeatedly (2:19-22, 10:17-18), but the disciples couldn't process this until after the event. Luke 24:25-27, 44-47 shows Jesus later explaining these Scriptures, transforming how the church read the OT.

Study Questions

1. Why does God often bring us to belief through experience before we understand the biblical prophecies?
2. How does the disciples' ignorance of resurrection prophecy actually strengthen the historical case for resurrection?
3. What current experiences of God might you be living through without yet understanding the scriptural framework?
