

John 5:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

When Jesus saw him lie, and knew that he had been now a long time in that case, he saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

Analysis

Jesus' question seems strange: 'Wilt thou be made whole?' After 38 years, wouldn't the answer be obvious? Yet Jesus probes the man's desire and will. Long illness can produce resignation; some become identified with their condition. True healing requires willingness to change. The question also invites faith—recognizing Jesus as one who can heal. Before acting, Jesus engages the man's will.

Historical Context

The question parallels Jesus' frequent inquiry about faith before healing. It distinguishes passive waiting from active desire for change. The man's response (verse 7) reveals complaint rather than faith—yet Jesus heals anyway, demonstrating grace that precedes faith.

1. Why does Jesus ask about willingness when the need seems obvious?
2. How can long-term suffering produce resignation that resists healing?
