

Joshua 9:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And now, behold, we are in thine hand: as it seemeth good and right unto thee to do unto us, do.

Analysis

We are in thine hand: as it seemeth good and right unto thee to do unto us, do (הַנָּנוּ בְּיַדְךָ כַּטּוֹב וּמְשֻׁר בְּעִינְךָ) — complete surrender to Joshua's judgment. The phrase 'in thine hand' (בְּיַדְךָ) appears frequently in Scripture as submission to authority (Genesis 16:6, 1 Samuel 24:4). The doubled expression 'good and right' (tov veiyashar) acknowledges Joshua's moral authority to determine justice.

This unconditional submission contrasts with their earlier deception. Having manipulated circumstances through lies, they now abandoned all pretense and cast themselves on mercy. Their posture anticipates the tax collector's prayer, 'God be merciful to me a sinner' (Luke 18:13). Joshua's response—protection rather than execution—models how covenant grace operates: those who acknowledge unworthiness and submit to divine authority receive mercy rather than deserved judgment.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern treaty protocols required vassal nations to pledge complete submission to the suzerain. The Gibeonites used diplomatic language acknowledging Joshua's absolute authority over their fate. However, Joshua's existing oath (v. 15, 19) constrained his options—their deception trapped Israel into covenant obligations that God's character would honor despite human failure to seek His counsel.
