

Judges 6:29

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they said one to another, Who hath done this thing? And when they enquired and asked, they said, Gideon the son of Joash hath done this thing.

Analysis

The townspeople investigate: 'Who hath done this thing?' Their question seeks to identify and punish the perpetrator of what they view as sacrilege against Baal. After inquiring and searching (vayidreshu vayevakshu, וַיַּדְרְשׁוּ וַיַּבְקַשׁוּ, 'they inquired and sought'), they conclude 'Gideon the son of Joash hath done this thing.' The verbs suggest thorough investigation—questioning witnesses, examining evidence, following leads. Their determination to find the culprit reveals the seriousness they attach to Baal worship. The identification of Gideon by name and patronymic (son of Joash) formally designates him for judgment.

Historical Context

Baal worship enjoyed civic protection and popular participation, making attacks on Baal altars acts of religious sedition threatening community cohesion. Ancient Near Eastern cities often identified strongly with patron deities—attacking the god's altar insulted the entire community. The investigation's thoroughness suggests either witnesses saw suspicious activity or evidence pointed clearly to Joash's household. Gideon's act was deliberate reformation, not anonymous vandalism.
