

Luke 1:46

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And Mary said, My soul doth magnify the Lord,

Analysis

---

Mary's Magnificat (vv.46-55) begins 'My soul doth magnify the Lord' (μεγαλύνει ἡ ψυχὴ μου τὸν κύριον). The verb 'megalynō' (μεγαλύνω) means to make great or enlarge—not that Mary can literally make God greater, but that she exalts and proclaims His greatness. This hymn is saturated with Old Testament allusions, particularly Hannah's prayer (1 Samuel 2:1-10), demonstrating Mary's deep scriptural knowledge. The structure follows Hebrew poetic parallelism, and the content emphasizes God's mighty acts in salvation history: remembering mercy, scattering the proud, exalting the humble, filling the hungry, sending the rich away empty. Mary sees her personal experience as part of God's larger redemptive pattern of reversing worldly values and vindicating the faithful.

Historical Context

The Magnificat represents one of four hymns in Luke's infancy narrative (along with Zacharias's Benedictus, the angels' Gloria, and Simeon's Nunc Dimittis). Early Christian worship incorporated these hymns, as evidenced by their preservation in liturgical language. Some ancient manuscripts attribute the Magnificat to Elizabeth, though overwhelming textual evidence supports Mary. The hymn's revolutionary social content—exalting the lowly, deposing the mighty—would resonate with Luke's emphasis on Jesus' concern for the marginalized.
