

Luke 1:47

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.

Analysis

Mary's declaration 'my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour' reveals theological depth—she recognizes her need for a Savior despite being chosen to bear God's Son. The perfect tense 'hath rejoiced' indicates completed action with ongoing results; her joy began and continues. Mary's identification of God as 'my Saviour' refutes later Marian dogmas of sinlessness—she needed salvation like all humanity. Her rejoicing flows not from personal merit but from God's gracious choice and saving work. This models that highest honor from God still requires His saving grace. Mary's Magnificat echoes Hannah's song (1 Sam 2), showing her saturation in Scripture and God's pattern of exalting the humble.

Historical Context

Mary's use of 'Saviour' (Greek 'soter') applies to God what angels would soon announce about her son (Luke 2:11). Her recognition of needing salvation despite her unique role demonstrates Jewish understanding that all people need God's redemptive work.
