

Luke 1:69

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David;

Analysis

Zacharias prophesies that God has 'raised up an horn of salvation...in the house of his servant David.' The 'horn' symbolizes strength and power (1 Sam 2:10; Ps 132:17), while 'salvation' indicates deliverance and rescue. This horn specifically comes from David's house, fulfilling God's covenant promise (2 Sam 7:12-16). The perfect tense 'hath raised up' declares what God has accomplished in Mary's conception, though Jesus hasn't yet been born—prophetic certainty treats future fulfillment as accomplished fact. This demonstrates that salvation originates in God's sovereign power, not human effort. The Davidic lineage establishes Jesus's rightful claim to Israel's throne.

Historical Context

The 'horn of salvation' echoes Hannah's prayer (1 Sam 2:1) and numerous psalms, showing continuity of redemptive hope. The Davidic covenant promised an eternal dynasty, fulfilled ultimately in Christ whose kingdom has no end. Zacharias interprets recent events through this covenant framework.
