

Luke 1:78

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the dayspring from on high hath visited us,

Analysis

Salvation comes 'through the tender mercy of our God' whereby 'the dayspring from on high hath visited us.' 'Tender mercy' (Greek 'splanchna eleous,' bowels of mercy) indicates deep compassion. 'Dayspring' (anatole) means sunrise/dawn, symbolizing Christ as light breaking into darkness. The phrase 'from on high' emphasizes heaven as the source—salvation descends from God, not ascending from humanity. The verb 'visited' (episkeptomai) indicates divine intervention in human affairs. This verse beautifully expresses that salvation originates entirely in God's compassionate initiative, bringing light to those in darkness. Christ's coming is compared to sunrise—inevitable, powerful, illuminating, life-giving.

Historical Context

The imagery of sunrise after darkness resonated with Israel's hope for deliverance. Christ as 'dayspring' fulfilled prophecies of light coming to those in darkness (Isa 9:2; 60:1-2; Mal 4:2). His advent brought spiritual illumination after centuries of prophetic silence.
