

Luke 12:46

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and will cut him in sunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.

Analysis

The lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware (ἥξει ὁ κύριος τοῦ δούλου ἐκείνου ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἢ οὐ προσδοκᾷ καὶ ἐν ὥρᾳ ἢ οὐ γινώσκει, ἥξει ho kyrios tou doulou ekeinou en hēmera hē ou prosdoka kai en hōra hē ou ginōskei)—The future tense ἥξει (ἥξει, will come) assures the master's certain return despite the servant's presumption of delay. The temporal clauses emphasize unexpectedness: en hēmera hē ou prosdoka (ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἢ οὐ προσδοκᾷ, in a day when he expects not) and en hōra hē ou ginōskei (ἐν ὥρᾳ ἢ οὐ γινώσκει, at an hour when he knows not). The unfaithful servant's ignorance isn't innocent—he willfully abandoned watchfulness.

And will cut him in sunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers (καὶ διχοτομήσει αὐτὸν καὶ τὸ μέρος αὐτοῦ μετὰ τῶν ἀπίστων θήσει, kai dichotomēsei auton kai to meros autou meta tōn apistōn thēsei)—The punishment is severe. The verb dichotomeō (διχοτομέω) literally means to cut in two, bisect—capital punishment by cutting apart (used literally or figuratively for severe judgment). The phrase to meros autou meta tōn apistōn (τὸ μέρος αὐτοῦ μετὰ τῶν ἀπίστων, his portion with the unbelievers) assigns the unfaithful servant to the same destiny as apistoi (ἀπιστοί, unbelievers, unfaithful ones). Despite outward profession and position, the evil servant's actions reveal unregenerate heart, resulting in eternal judgment alongside unbelievers.

Historical Context

This severe language reflects both literal ancient punishments (bisection was practiced in some ancient cultures) and metaphorical description of final judgment's horror. Jesus consistently warned that profession without transformation, position without faithfulness, and knowledge without obedience lead to condemnation (Matthew 7:21-23, 25:30). The early church recognized that apostasy from the faith proves one was never truly regenerated (1 John 2:19). Judas Iscariot exemplified this—close proximity to Jesus, entrusted with position, yet ultimately revealed as unregenerate and condemned.

Study Questions

1. What does the unfaithful servant's unexpected judgment teach about the danger of presuming upon God's patience?
2. How does being assigned a portion with unbelievers demonstrate that outward position doesn't guarantee salvation?
3. In what ways does this warning challenge nominal Christianity and religious profession without genuine transformation?
