

Luke 16:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.

Analysis

Jesus applies the lesson: 'And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.' The command 'make to yourselves friends' (ποιήσατε φίλους, poiēsate philous) 'of the mammon of unrighteousness' (ἐκ τοῦ μαμωνᾶ τῆς ἀδικίας, ek tou mamōna tēs adikias) means use money (inherently tied to this fallen world) strategically. The phrase 'when ye fail' (ὅταν ἐκλίπη, hotan eklipe) refers to death or money's ultimate failure. Then 'they may receive you' (δέξωνται ὑμᾶς, dexōntai hymas) 'into everlasting habitations' (εἰς τὰς αἰωνίους σκηνάς, eis tas aiōnious skēnas)—people you've blessed with resources will welcome you into eternity. Use money to advance the gospel and serve others; such investments yield eternal dividends.

Historical Context

This verse presents a theology of money unique in Scripture. 'Mammon' (μαμωνᾶς, mamōnas) is an Aramaic term for wealth, personified as a rival god (v. 13). Jesus calls it 'unrighteous' not because earning money is sinful but because wealth belongs to this fallen, temporary world system. Yet even tainted money can be redeemed through kingdom use. The startling promise is that generosity now creates eternal friendships—those blessed by our resources will greet us in heaven. This doesn't teach salvation by works but rather that genuine faith expresses itself in generosity (James 2:14-17). How we use money reveals and develops our hearts.
