

Luke 17:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you.

Analysis

Jesus teaches about faith: 'And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you.' The disciples requested increased faith (v. 5). Jesus responds that even 'faith as a grain of mustard seed' (πίστιν ὡς κόκκον σινάπεως, pistin hōs kokkon sinapeōs)—proverbially the smallest seed—suffices for impossible tasks. The example: commanding 'this sycamine tree' (τῇ συκαμίνῳ ταύτῃ, tē sykaminō tautē)—a hardy tree with deep roots—'be plucked up... and planted in the sea' (Ἐκρίζωθητι καὶ φυτεύθητι ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ, Ekrizōthēti kai phyteuthēti en tē thalassē), 'and it should obey you' (ὁπήκουσεν ἂν ὑμῖν, hypēkousen an hymin). The issue isn't quantity but quality—genuine faith, however small, accesses God's unlimited power.

Historical Context

The mustard seed metaphor appears throughout Jesus' teaching (Matthew 13:31-32, 17:20). The point isn't faith's size but its reality—even tiny genuine faith accomplishes what seems impossible because it connects to God's omnipotence. The sycamine tree (often identified with the black mulberry) had deep, strong roots, making transplanting extremely difficult. That Jesus specifies not just uprooting but replanting in the sea emphasizes the impossibility. Yet faith makes impossible things happen—not because faith itself has power but because faith accesses God's power. This teaching challenges both presumption (demanding God perform according to our wishes) and despair (thinking nothing can change). Even weak faith in an almighty God moves mountains.
