

Luke 2:30

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For mine eyes have seen thy salvation,

Analysis

Simeon declares: 'For mine eyes have seen thy salvation' (ὅτι εἶδον οἱ ὀφθαλμοί μου τὸ σωτήριόν σου). The perfect tense 'eidon' (εἶδον, have seen) emphasizes completed action with continuing effects—he has seen and continues to possess this vision. 'Sōtērion' (σωτήριον, salvation) is neuter, referring to the means or instrument of salvation—the infant Jesus Himself is God's salvation incarnate. The possessive 'thy salvation' (σου) identifies Jesus as God's provision, planned from eternity. This echoes Isaiah 52:10: 'all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.' Simeon recognizes the universal scope of Christ's mission (v.31-32: 'a light to lighten the Gentiles'), expanding beyond Jewish particularism.

Historical Context

In Luke's theology, salvation (sōtēria) encompasses forgiveness of sins (1:77), deliverance from enemies, healing, and restoration. Simeon's declaration that salvation would be 'prepared before the face of all people' (v.31) challenged Jewish assumptions about Gentile exclusion. Within 20 years of Jesus' resurrection, the gospel would reach Rome, Antioch, and beyond, vindicating Simeon's prophecy. The humble presentation of a poor couple's baby became the hinge-point of salvation history.
