

Luke 2:40

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him.

Analysis

Luke summarizes Jesus' childhood: 'And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him' (τὸ δὲ παιδίον ἠΰξανεν καὶ ἐκραταιοῦτο πληρούμενον σοφία, καὶ χάρις θεοῦ ἦν ἐπ' αὐτό). The verbs 'auxanō' (ἠΰξανεν, grew) and 'krataioō' (ἐκραταιοῦτο, waxed strong) describe normal human development—Jesus experienced genuine childhood, not docetic appearance. The present passive participle 'plēroumenon sophia' (πληρούμενον σοφία, being filled with wisdom) indicates progressive development, while 'charis theou' (χάρις θεοῦ, grace of God) rested upon Him. This demonstrates the hypostatic union—Jesus' full humanity developed normally while His divine nature remained fully present. He learned as humans learn, yet without sin.

Historical Context

Jesus' childhood in Nazareth was unremarkable by outward appearance—He learned carpentry from Joseph (Mark 6:3), studied Torah, participated in synagogue life. The absence of miracle accounts from these years (apocryphal gospels notwithstanding) emphasizes normal development. His humanity was not diminished by deity; rather, deity expressed itself through authentic human experience including growth in wisdom (Luke 2:52). This 18-year 'hidden life' prepared Him for public ministry.

1. What does Jesus' normal human development teach about the full reality of the incarnation?
2. How should Christ's example of steady growth in wisdom encourage our own spiritual formation?
