

Luke 20:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then came to him certain of the Sadducees, which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked him,

Analysis

Then came to him certain of the Sadducees, which deny that there is any resurrection (Σαδδουκαῖοι λέγοντες ἀνάστασιν μὴ εἶναι, Saddoukaioi legontes anastasin mē einai)—Luke introduces the Sadducees by their defining denial. The ἀνάστασις (anastasis, 'resurrection') refers to bodily resurrection at the end of the age, which Sadducees rejected, accepting only the Torah (not Prophets or Writings) as authoritative.

After Pharisees and Herodians failed with the tax question, the Sadducees—aristocratic priests who controlled the temple—try a different angle. Their question will attempt to make resurrection doctrine appear absurd through reductio ad absurdum. The theological coalition against Jesus is comprehensive: every major Jewish faction seeks to discredit him.

Historical Context

Sadducees were the priestly aristocracy, including the high priest's family, who collaborated with Rome and controlled temple operations. Unlike Pharisees, they rejected oral tradition, belief in angels, spirits, and bodily resurrection (Acts 23:8). They accepted only the five books of Moses. Most disappeared after the temple's destruction in AD 70.

Study Questions

1. Why does denial of resurrection naturally lead to different priorities and values in this life?
2. How do theological denials often stem from philosophical commitments rather than biblical exegesis?
3. What does it reveal that every Jewish faction united against Jesus despite their mutual disagreements?
