

Luke 20:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And Jesus said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

Analysis

Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things—Jesus' refusal (οὐδὲ ἐγὼ λέγω ὑμῖν, oude egō legō hymin) isn't evasion but justified silence before bad-faith interrogators. Since they won't acknowledge obvious truth about John, they've proven themselves unqualified and unwilling to recognize divine authority when confronted with it. Jesus' silence judges them more severely than explanation would.

This response demonstrates wisdom in spiritual warfare. Jesus doesn't cast pearls before swine (Matthew 7:6). They didn't lack evidence for His authority—miracles, fulfilled prophecies, authoritative teaching, transformation of lives. Their question wasn't genuine inquiry but attempted entrapment. By refusing to answer those unwilling to face truth they already possessed, Jesus protects the sacred from profanation and exposes their hardened hearts. His silence also fulfills Isaiah 53:7—the Suffering Servant who "opened not his mouth" before unjust accusers.

Historical Context

This exchange occurred in the temple courts during Passion Week, with large crowds listening. Jesus' response publicly exposed the leaders' hypocrisy while protecting Himself from premature arrest. The timing wasn't yet right—Jesus would die on God's schedule, not theirs. The leaders' failure here intensified their resolve to destroy Jesus, but they feared the crowds (19:47-48, 20:19). This confrontation set the stage for subsequent attempts to trap Jesus with questions about taxes (20:20-26), resurrection (20:27-40), and His identity (20:41-44).
