

Luke 22:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in.

Analysis

And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in. Jesus provides remarkably specific instructions. Behold (ἰδού, idou) commands attention to coming revelation. A man... bearing a pitcher of water (ἄνθρωπος κεράμιον ὕδατος βαστάζων, anthrōpos keramion hydatos bastazōn) is the identifying sign—unusual because water-carrying was women's work; a man carrying water would stand out.

The command follow him (ἀκολουθήσατε αὐτῷ, akolouthēsate autō) uses discipleship language—the same 'follow' Jesus uses for following Him. This demonstrates either:

1. supernatural foreknowledge of events
2. prearranged signals with the homeowner, or
3. both—Jesus sovereignly ordained circumstances He also naturally arranged.

The instructions' precision recalls Old Testament prophetic signs (1 Samuel 10:2-6) and demonstrates Jesus' control even as events spiral toward betrayal. While enemies plot, Jesus orchestrates.

Historical Context

Women typically carried water jars on their heads; men used wineskins. A man carrying a ceramic pitcher (keramion) would be immediately noticeable in Jerusalem's crowded streets. Some scholars suggest this was John Mark's father's home, where the church later met (Acts 12:12), though this is speculative.
