

Luke 23:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then said Pilate to the chief priests and to the people, I find no fault in this man.

Analysis

I find no fault in this man (οὐδὲν εὑρίσκω αἴτιον, ouden heuriskō aition)—Pilate's first declaration of Jesus's innocence. The Greek aition means 'cause' or 'legal charge,' making this a formal acquittal: 'I find no basis for an accusation.' Luke records Pilate's innocence declaration three times (vv. 4, 14, 22), establishing Jesus's legal blamelessness before Roman law.

This verdict fulfills Isaiah 53:9 ('he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth') and demonstrates the injustice of what follows. Pilate's assertion contradicts the Sanhedrin's accusations of perverting the nation, forbidding tribute to Caesar, and claiming kingship (v. 2). The Roman prefect's public exoneration exposes the fabricated nature of the charges while ironically testifying to Christ's sinlessness—the very qualification necessary for him to be humanity's spotless sacrifice (Hebrews 4:15, 1 Peter 1:19).

Historical Context

Roman legal procedure (cognitio extra ordinem) required the governor to investigate charges personally. Pilate, governing Judea AD 26-36, was known for his contempt of Jewish sensibilities (Josephus, Philo) yet feared popular unrest that could threaten his position. His verdict here reflects standard Roman jurisprudence—without evidence of sedition or treason, he had no legal grounds for execution.

Study Questions

1. How does Pilate's triple declaration of innocence magnify the injustice of Jesus's crucifixion and our own guilt in requiring it?
2. What does it reveal about human nature that Pilate could recognize Jesus's innocence yet still condemn him to death?
