

Luke 24:48

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And ye are witnesses of these things.

Analysis

The apostolic commission: 'And ye are witnesses of these things.' Jesus declares: 'ye are witnesses' (ὁμεῖς μάρτυρες, hymeis martyres) 'of these things' (τούτων, toutōn)—His life, death, and resurrection. A witness testifies to what they've seen and heard. The disciples had firsthand experience of Jesus' ministry, crucifixion, and resurrection appearances. Their testimony would launch Christianity. The term 'martyres' became the source of 'martyr,' as many witnesses died for their testimony. This commission establishes apostolic authority—they are authorized witnesses whose testimony forms the New Testament foundation. The church is built on apostolic witness (Ephesians 2:20), which continues through Scripture they produced.

Historical Context

The concept of witness is crucial in Luke-Acts. Luke writes 'that thou mightest know the certainty of those things' (Luke 1:4) based on eyewitness testimony (Luke 1:2). Acts emphasizes apostles as resurrection witnesses (Acts 1:8, 22, 2:32, 3:15, 5:32, 10:39-41, 13:31). Their testimony was historical, not mythological—they saw, touched, ate with the risen Jesus. Skeptics note that we're dependent on these witnesses' truthfulness. But their credibility is strong:

1. multiple independent witnesses
2. willingness to die for testimony
3. inclusion of embarrassing details
4. immediate proclamation when contradictors could refute.

The witnesses' testimony, preserved in Scripture, remains the foundation of Christian faith.
