

Luke 3:19

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done,

Analysis

Herod's response to John's rebuke demonstrates how conviction produces either repentance or hostility. John 'reproved' (Greek 'elegcho'—expose, convict) Herod for Herodias (his brother's wife) and 'all the evils which Herod had done.' The comprehensiveness ('all the evils') shows John's fearless confrontation of power. That rebuke specifically addressed Herodias indicates John's willingness to confront powerful sexual sin. Herod's eventual response—imprisonment and execution (v20)—shows how prophetic faithfulness often results in persecution. John's boldness models that true ministry confronts sin regardless of the sinner's power or position. Speaking truth to power demonstrates courage rooted in God's authority.

Historical Context

Herod Antipas divorced his wife to marry Herodias, his half-brother Philip's wife, violating Levitical law (Lev 18:16; 20:21). John's public denunciation threatened Herod's political stability and marriage. His bold rebuke cost him his life (Mark 6:14-29) but demonstrated that prophets must speak God's word regardless of consequences.
