

Luke 4:37

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

Analysis

And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

The Greek exeporeueto ēchos peri autou (ἐξεπορεύετο ἦχος περὶ αὐτοῦ, went out a report concerning him) describes rapid dissemination of news about Jesus. The word ēchos (ἦχος, sound/report/fame) suggests spreading like sound waves—expanding outward in all directions. The phrase eis panta topon (εἰς πάντα τόπον, into every place) indicates comprehensive geographic spread throughout the region.

This fame resulted from the combination of authoritative teaching (v. 32) and demonstrative power (vv. 33-36). Word and deed worked together to validate Jesus' messianic claims. The exorcism proved what His teaching proclaimed—God's kingdom was breaking into the present, evil's power was being destroyed. News of such unprecedented authority naturally spread rapidly in a culture hungry for messianic deliverance.

Historical Context

News traveled quickly in first-century Galilee through trade routes, synagogue networks, and oral culture. Galilean towns were relatively close together, with active commerce and communication. Miracle workers and rabbis with distinctive teaching attracted attention, but Jesus was unprecedented—teaching with inherent authority and performing miracles with simple commands. This combination drew crowds and created both opportunity and opposition. The spreading fame fulfilled

Isaiah 9:1-2's prophecy that Galilee would see great light. Yet fame also brought challenges—crowds seeking miracles rather than repentance, and religious leaders' growing opposition.
