

Luke 4:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the devil said unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it.

Analysis

---

Satan's claim 'to whomsoever I will I give it' asserts authority over earthly kingdoms, a claim Jesus does not dispute. Scripture affirms Satan's current but temporary dominion as 'prince of this world' (John 12:31, 14:30, 16:11). First John 5:19 states 'the whole world lieth in wickedness'—literally 'in the evil one.' Yet Reformed theology maintains God's ultimate sovereignty; Satan operates only by divine permission (Job 1-2). Satan offers Jesus what is already Christ's by right—Psalm 2:8 promises the Father will give the Son 'the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.' The temptation is to grasp immediately what God has promised to give through appointed means. Philippians 2:6-11 contrasts Satan's usurpation with Christ's humble obedience: Jesus did not grasp at equality with God but humbled Himself, therefore God highly exalted Him.

Historical Context

Roman occupation of Judea made messianic expectations intensely political. Most first-century Jews anticipated a military-political Messiah who would liberate Israel from foreign domination and establish God's kingdom with Jerusalem as its capital. The Zealot movement advocated armed rebellion. Satan's offer plays directly into these expectations—immediate political power without the scandal of a crucified Messiah. The Dead Sea Scrolls reveal expectations of a conquering 'Son of God' who would judge the nations. Jesus's rejection of earthly power in favor of the cross would prove a 'stumbling block to Jews and foolishness to Gentiles' (1 Corinthians 1:23). His kingdom is 'not of this world' (John 18:36), obtained not through Satan's gift but through redemptive suffering.
