

Luke 5:32

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

Analysis

Jesus declares His mission: 'I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.' The phrase 'I came' (Greek 'elēlytha,' ἐλήλυθα, perfect tense) indicates Jesus' consciousness of His incarnational purpose—He came from heaven on divine mission. His target audience is 'sinners'—those who recognize their condition and need repentance. The word 'call' (Greek 'kalesai,' καλέσαι) means to summon, invite—gospel call summons sinners to repent. Those considering themselves 'righteous' don't hear this call because they see no need. True righteousness comes through repentance and faith, not self-achieved moral performance.

Historical Context

The phrase 'I came' occurs repeatedly in Jesus' teaching, revealing His sense of divine mission (Mark 2:17, Luke 19:10, John 10:10). First-century Pharisees pursued righteousness through law observance, considering themselves God's favored ones based on their religious performance. Jesus' statement that He came for sinners, not the righteous, either meant

1. He came for those who acknowledge sin, not those claiming righteousness, or
2. ironically, since none are truly righteous (Romans 3:23), He came for all who recognize their need.

Either way, self-righteousness excludes from grace. Only those admitting sin receive forgiveness.

Study Questions

1. What does Jesus' declaration that He came 'to call sinners to repentance' teach about the gospel's target audience and message?
2. How does Jesus' pattern of receiving sinners while opposing self-righteous Pharisees illustrate grace's paradox—available to all but received only by those admitting need?
