

Luke 7:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they that were sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick.

Analysis

And they that were sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick. The passive participle hygiainonta (ὕγιαίνοντα, being in health/sound) confirms the healing's completeness—not gradual improvement but instant restoration to perfect health. The perfect participle asthenēsanta (ἀσθενήσαντα, having been sick) emphasizes the prior state, highlighting the miraculous transformation.

Luke, the physician, emphasizes medical verification—those sent found the servant already healed when they returned. The healing occurred at Jesus' word, across distance, without physical contact. This demonstrates Christ's sovereignty over space and matter, His word alone accomplishing what it declares. The centurion's faith was vindicated: Christ's word proved sufficient. This previews resurrection power: Christ's voice will call forth the dead (John 5:28-29).

Historical Context

Ancient Mediterranean culture valued eyewitness testimony. Luke carefully notes that multiple witnesses (the Jewish elders sent to Jesus) verified the healing upon returning home. This medical verification from Luke the physician adds credibility to the miracle account.

Study Questions

1. How does this instant, distant healing demonstrate that Christ's power is not limited by physical proximity or presence?
2. What does the complete healing ('whole') teach about Christ's ability to fully restore what is broken in your life?
3. How should the vindication of the centurion's faith encourage you to trust Christ's promises even before seeing results?
