

Luke 7:35

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But wisdom is justified of all her children.

Analysis

A Pharisee invites Jesus to dinner: 'And one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him' (Greek 'ērota auton hina phagē met' autou'). Despite earlier opposition, this Pharisee extends hospitality. Motivations unclear—genuine curiosity, social obligation, or trap. Jesus accepts, demonstrating accessibility even to critics. His presence provides opportunity for teaching and witness. The subsequent account (Luke 7:36-50) shows Jesus using dinner setting for profound lesson about forgiveness and love. Reformed theology affirms that Christians should engage even hostile audiences when opportunity for witness exists. Paul's Mars Hill address (Acts 17:22-31) exemplifies this—respecting audience while proclaiming truth.

Historical Context

Pharisaic dinner invitations tested guests through careful observation of ritual washing, prayers, food selection. The coming narrative shows the Pharisee judging Jesus for allowing a sinful woman's touch. Ancient Near Eastern meals involved reclining on couches, feet extended away from table, making the woman's approach possible. Dinner conversations were semi-public—neighbors and students might observe. For Luke's readers, Jesus's willingness to dine with critics while maintaining truth demonstrated appropriate engagement strategy.
