

Luke 7:36

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him. And he went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat.

Analysis

Jesus enters the Pharisee's house: 'And he went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat' (Greek 'eiselthōn eis ton oikon tou Pharisaïou kateklithē'). The verb 'kateklithē' (reclined) indicates formal meal customs—guests reclined on couches rather than sitting in chairs. This posture (feet extending away from table) explains how the woman in coming narrative could approach Jesus's feet. Jesus's presence in Pharisee's home demonstrates His missional accessibility. He didn't insulate Himself from potential critics or uncomfortable settings. Reformed theology recognizes incarnational ministry requires entering others' spaces, accepting their hospitality, speaking truth in their contexts. Isolation prevents witness; engagement creates opportunities.

Historical Context

Greco-Roman and Jewish dinner customs involved reclining on left side, right hand free for eating. Multiple guests shared couches arranged around table. The semi-public nature meant servants, students, and curious onlookers might observe. Pharisaic meals included ritual hand-washing, blessing prayers, and careful food selection to maintain purity. Jesus's later omission of washing (Luke 11:38) scandalized His hosts. For early church, Jesus's example of engaging hostile audiences while maintaining truth provided model for witness in hostile contexts.

Study Questions

1. What does Jesus's willingness to enter potentially hostile environments teach about missional engagement?
2. How do we balance accepting others' hospitality with maintaining convictional boundaries?
3. When does entering others' spaces for witness become compromise versus appropriate contextualization?
