

Luke 9:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

Analysis

And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God (κηρύσσειν τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ θεοῦ)—The verb kēryssō means to herald as a royal messenger, not merely to teach. The apostles were commissioned as ambassadors of the coming Kingdom, announcing God's sovereign rule breaking into history through Christ. This was the same message John the Baptist proclaimed (Luke 3:3) and Jesus himself preached (Luke 4:43).

And to heal the sick (ἰᾶσθαι)—The pairing of proclamation and healing demonstrates the Kingdom's comprehensive nature: salvation addresses both spiritual and physical dimensions. The miracles authenticated the message and provided tangible evidence that God's rule brings restoration to fallen creation. This dual commission anticipates the Great Commission's authority 'in heaven and on earth' (Matthew 28:18).

Historical Context

Luke 9:1-6 records Jesus sending out the Twelve on a limited mission during his Galilean ministry (AD 28-29). This training mission prepared the apostles for their post-resurrection role. Unlike the later sending of the seventy-two (Luke 10), this was restricted to Israel ('Go not into the way of the Gentiles,' Matthew 10:5), fulfilling prophecy that Messiah would come 'to the lost sheep of the house of Israel' first (Matthew 15:24).

Study Questions

1. How does the pairing of preaching and healing challenge a purely 'spiritual' gospel that ignores physical suffering?
2. What does it mean to herald the Kingdom (not just invite people to church) in your cultural context?
