

Luke 9:24

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.

Analysis

Jesus declares a paradox: 'For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.' The Greek 'ψυχή' (ψυχή) means life/soul. Attempts to preserve life through self-protection, self-indulgence, or self-advancement result in losing true life. Conversely, losing life—dying to self, sacrificing for Christ, prioritizing kingdom over comfort—results in gaining true, eternal life. This counterintuitive principle inverts worldly wisdom. Self-preservation destroys; self-sacrifice saves. The cross demonstrates this—Jesus lost His life to save ours.

Historical Context

This statement immediately follows Jesus' call to take up the cross daily (v. 23). First-century hearers knew 'losing life' could mean literal martyrdom. Early Christians faced exactly this choice—save physical life by denying Christ or lose it by confessing Him. Paradoxically, martyrs gained eternal life while apostates lost it. The principle applies beyond martyrdom—daily dying to self-will and living for Christ's purposes results in abundant life. Conversely, living for self—even achieving worldly success—results in spiritual loss. Jesus' own death and resurrection embodied this principle—He lost His life and gained resurrection glory.

Study Questions

1. How does the paradox of losing life to save it contradict worldly wisdom about self-preservation and success?
2. In what practical ways does this principle apply beyond literal martyrdom to daily Christian living?
