

Luke 9:57

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And it came to pass, that, as they went in the way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

Analysis

And it came to pass, that, as they went in the way (ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ, en tē hodō)—Luke introduces three would-be disciples encountered on the way to Jerusalem, where Jesus goes to die. The 'way' (ὁδός) becomes a metaphor for discipleship itself, the path of following Christ to the cross. A certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest (ἀκολουθήσω σοι ὅπου ἔὰν ἀπέρχῃ, akolouthēsō soi hopou ean aperchē)—the man offers unconditional, unlimited commitment.

His enthusiasm appears admirable: 'anywhere you go, I'll go.' But Jesus perceives the shallowness beneath bold promises. The man hasn't counted the cost. He imagines following Jesus to glory, not Gethsemane; to coronation, not crucifixion. Jesus will test his resolve by describing discipleship's hardships (9:58), warning that the path leads to homelessness, rejection, and suffering. Enthusiasm without understanding makes poor disciples. The kingdom requires not just willingness to follow anywhere, but readiness to follow to Calvary.

Historical Context

Traveling teachers typically attracted disciples who provided for their master's needs in exchange for instruction. This cultural pattern expected comfortable arrangements—lodging, meals, patronage. Jesus's response (9:58) would shatter these expectations. Unlike other rabbis who enjoyed hospitality and support networks, following Jesus meant embracing material insecurity and social rejection. The cost of discipleship exceeded normal rabbinic apprenticeship.

Study Questions

1. What does the contrast between this man's enthusiastic promise and Jesus's sobering response teach about the danger of emotional commitment without careful consideration of the cost?
2. How does the setting 'on the way' to Jerusalem (where Jesus will die) frame all three discipleship encounters as tests of willingness to follow Christ to suffering, not just success?
