

Mark 14:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

Analysis

And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

The hymn (ὑμνέω, hymneō) was likely the second half of the Hallel (Psalms 115-118), traditionally sung at Passover's conclusion. Jesus and the disciples sang praise knowing what lay ahead—His betrayal, their desertion, His death. The verb ὑμνέω carries the sense of worship through song, making this one of Scripture's rare glimpses of Jesus singing.

Their destination, the mount of Olives (τὸ ὄρος τῶν Ἐλαιῶν, to oros tōn Elaiōn), fulfilled Zechariah 14:4's prophecy about Messiah standing there. This garden became the arena where the second Adam faced temptation—not in Eden's pleasure but Gethsemane's agony. Luke 22:39 notes this was Jesus' custom (κατὰ τὸ ἔθος, kata to ethos), showing deliberate habit even unto death.

Historical Context

The Mount of Olives, east of Jerusalem across the Kidron Valley, was a place of Jewish eschatological expectation. First-century pilgrims camped there during Passover when Jerusalem's population swelled from 50,000 to over 200,000. Jesus' regular use of this location made Judas's betrayal logistically simple.
