

Mark 3:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.

Analysis

Jesus extends principle from kingdom to household: 'if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.' The move from macro to micro personalizes the argument. First-century listeners understood family unity determined survival and prosperity. Internal strife destroyed families. The principle remains universal—whether kingdom, household, or satanic realm, internal division ensures collapse. Jesus' argument is airtight: Satan wouldn't sabotage his operation. Therefore, Jesus' power must come from God.

Historical Context

Ancient households (oīkoç) encompassed extended family, servants, dependents—economic and social units requiring unity. Inheritance disputes and family feuds regularly destroyed households. Roman law recognized paterfamilias whose authority maintained order. The principle applies throughout Scripture—Israel's kingdom divided led to both's downfall; apostolic warnings against church division (1 Corinthians 1:10-13; 3:3-4) reflect this concern.
