

Mark 4:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The sower soweth the word.

Analysis

Jesus provides interpretation: 'The sower soweth the word.' This identifies the seed as God's word—the gospel message, divine revelation, kingdom teaching. The sower represents Jesus primarily, but extends to all who proclaim God's word. The simplicity is profound: Christian ministry is sowing seed—proclaiming Scripture faithfully, leaving results to God. The minister's task isn't producing growth (that's God's work, 1 Corinthians 3:6-7) but faithful sowing. This liberates from results-oriented ministry pressure while demanding faithful, patient proclamation. The emphasis on 'the word' elevates Scripture's centrality in conversion and sanctification.

Historical Context

Jesus' identification of seed with 'the word' echoes Old Testament: God's word is living, active, accomplishing purposes (Isaiah 55:10-11); it's seed that produces fruit (Hosea 10:12). New Testament consistently emphasizes word's generative power: believers are born again through the living and abiding word (1 Peter 1:23); faith comes by hearing God's word (Romans 10:17). Early church prioritized Scripture reading and exposition, understanding ministry as word-centered. Reformers recovered this emphasis: sola scriptura, centrality of preaching, Bible translation.
