

Mark 4:22

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested;
neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad.

Analysis

---

Jesus declares universal principle: 'For there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested; neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad.' All hidden things will eventually be revealed. This applies multiple ways:

1. Kingdom mysteries now veiled will be unveiled
2. Secret sins will be exposed in judgment
3. Gospel truth, though rejected now, will be vindicated.

The double negative 'nothing...not' (οὐ...οὐ) emphasizes absoluteness. The purpose clause 'but that it should come abroad' (ἀλλ' ἵνα...ἔλθῃ εἰς φανερόν) indicates God intends revelation, not permanent concealment. Parables temporarily veil truth from hard hearts, but ultimate purpose is revelation.

Historical Context

This principle echoes throughout Scripture: God sees in secret and will reward openly (Matthew 6:4, 6, 18); nothing is covered that won't be revealed (Matthew 10:26; Luke 12:2); all will be manifest in judgment (Romans 2:16; 1 Corinthians 4:5; Hebrews 4:13). Jesus spoke this in context of parable teaching—mysteries veiled now will be unveiled. Early church trusted that persecuted truth would eventually triumph. Church history vindicates this: heresies eventually exposed, gospel truth prevails despite opposition, final judgment will reveal all secrets.
