

Mark 5:34

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And he said unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

Analysis

And he said unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague. Jesus' response transforms the woman's fear into blessing through tender words of affirmation. 'Daughter' (Θυγάτηρ, Thygatēr) is remarkably intimate—the only time in the Gospels Jesus addresses an individual woman this way. After twelve years of isolation and being untouchable, she hears herself called into family relationship with Christ. This tender address welcomes her from outcaste status into beloved belonging.

'Thy faith hath made thee whole' (ἡ πίστις σου σέσωκέν σε, hē pistis sou sesōken se) clarifies the healing's source—not the garment's magical properties but her faith in Christ. The verb σώζω (sōzō) carries dual meaning: physical healing and spiritual salvation, suggesting Jesus gave both. 'Go in peace' (ὕπαγε εἰς εἰρήνην, hypage eis eirēnēn) pronounces shalom—complete wellbeing, wholeness, and reconciliation with God and community. 'Be whole of thy plague' (ἴσθι ύγιης ἀπὸ τῆς μάστιγός σου, isthi hygiēs apo tēs mastigos sou) confirms permanent healing, not temporary relief. Jesus provides triple blessing: family adoption ('daughter'), spiritual salvation ('faith has saved you'), and complete restoration ('be whole'). This comprehensive healing models salvation's fullness—justification, adoption, sanctification, and glorification.

Historical Context

The word 'daughter' conferred social standing the woman had lost—family identity meant protection, belonging, and dignity in ancient society. Jesus publicly restored what twelve years of isolation had stripped away. The phrase 'thy faith hath made thee whole' (also rendered 'saved you') explicitly credited her faith, important for several reasons: it prevented superstitious interpretation (the garment had no power itself), it encouraged others to approach Jesus in faith, and it clarified that healing resulted from personal trust in Christ, not magical ritual. The command 'go in peace' was formal dismissal with blessing—rabbinic formula pronouncing divine favor. Early church interpretation saw this woman as representing the church (previously unclean Gentiles) made clean through faith in Christ. Church fathers contrasted her humble faith with religious leaders' proud unbelief—she received salvation they rejected. The twelve-year suffering period matched the age of Jairus's daughter (v. 42), suggesting theological significance: the same power that restored one woman's health would shortly raise another from death.
