

Mark 5:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped him,

Analysis

---

The possessed man's response to Jesus is paradoxical: 'when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped him.' The demons recognized Jesus immediately—'afar off' (ἀπὸ μακρόθεν) suggests supernatural perception. The verb 'worshipped' (προσεκύνησεν) indicates falling prostrate, though not willing worship but involuntary submission to superior power. This demonstrates demons recognize Jesus' authority and are compelled to acknowledge it. Even hell's forces cannot resist Creator's presence. The man ran to Jesus despite demonic resistance—perhaps human personality crying for liberation alongside demonic forced submission.

Historical Context

---

Demon recognition of Jesus appears throughout Gospels (Mark 1:24; 3:11). Demons possess superior knowledge—they know Jesus' identity clearly without faith's necessity. James 2:19 notes demons believe and tremble—theological accuracy without saving faith. Ancient exorcism practices involved lengthy rituals; Jesus required none. His presence alone compelled demonic submission. Early church experienced similar demonic recognition (Acts 16:16-17; 19:15). Church history affirms spiritual warfare reality—demons are real, powerful, yet completely subject to Christ's authority.
