

Mark 7:32

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech; and they beseech him to put his hand upon him.

Analysis

They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech—The Greek describes difficulty speaking—possibly mute or severely impaired. This rare word appears in Isaiah 35:6's Septuagint, prophesying messianic signs: the lame leaping, the dumb tongue singing. Mark's vocabulary evokes Isaiah's prophecy, signaling Jesus fulfills messianic expectations. The crowd's request for Jesus's touch demonstrates belief His touch conveys healing. This man's condition created profound isolation—unable to hear or speak clearly, he lived relationally disconnected. Healing restored not just physical faculties but relationship capacity. Spiritually, this pictures pre-salvation humanity: deaf to God's voice, unable to speak His praise, isolated from divine-human communion.

Historical Context

In the ancient world, disabilities carried severe stigma, often interpreted as divine judgment. Those unable to hear or speak faced limited opportunities and social marginalization. Jesus's consistent healing of such individuals demonstrated God's heart toward the marginalized. The crowd's compassion reflects earlier testimony's impact in the Decapolis—when the Gerasene proclaimed what Jesus did (Mark 5:20), skepticism gave way to expectant faith.
