

Mark 8:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

After that he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was restored, and saw every man clearly.

Analysis

After that he put his hands again upon him—The Greek palin (πάλιν, 'again') emphasizes the deliberate two-stage process. This second imposition of hands (epithēken tas cheiras, ἐπέθηκεν τὰς χεῖρας) brings complete restoration. The verb dieblepsen (διέβλεψεν, 'he looked intently') is intensive, meaning 'to see clearly, to look through.' Mark alone preserves this detail.

He was restored, and saw every man clearly—Apokatestathē (ἀποκατεστάθη, 'was restored') implies return to original function, presupposing prior sight. The phrase eneblepsen hapantas (ἐνέβλεψεν ἅπαντας, 'saw all things clearly') uses an emphatic form—not just sight, but penetrating clarity. This restoration prefigures resurrection restoration: what sin blurred, Christ clarifies. The miracle's placement between bread discussions and Peter's confession is no accident—Mark structures his narrative to show that recognizing Jesus's true identity requires divine illumination, often granted progressively.

Historical Context

Complete healing validated Jesus's messianic authority in a culture where physical afflictions were often interpreted as divine judgment. The two-stage process, unique among Jesus's healings, served pedagogical purposes—teaching disciples about the nature of faith, revelation, and progressive spiritual understanding during His earthly ministry.
