

Mark 9:32

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him.

Analysis

The disciples' response reveals their spiritual dullness: 'they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him' (οἱ δὲ ἠγνόουν τὸ ῥῆμα, καὶ ἐφοβοῦντο αὐτὸν ἐπερωτῆσαι). The verb 'understood not' (ēgnōoun, ἠγνόουν) indicates incomprehension, not mere ignorance. Jesus spoke plainly (v. 31), yet they couldn't grasp it. This demonstrates that spiritual truth requires divine illumination (1 Corinthians 2:14)—natural human reason cannot comprehend God's wisdom. Their fear to ask (ephobounto, ἐφοβοῦντο) shows awareness that they should understand but didn't. Perhaps they feared rebuke (like Peter in Mark 8:33) or dreaded confirmation of Jesus' disturbing words. This combination—incomprehension and fear—prevented them from seeking clarity. How often does pride or fear keep us from asking Jesus for understanding?

Historical Context

The disciples' inability to understand Jesus' passion predictions despite clear statements demonstrates the radical nature of a suffering Messiah concept. Every cultural and theological framework they possessed emphasized triumphant Messiah, not dying Messiah. Isaiah 53's suffering servant wasn't clearly connected to Messiah in Jewish interpretation. The disciples' fear to ask reflects ancient Mediterranean honor culture where admitting ignorance could bring shame. Additionally, Peter's recent rebuke (Mark 8:32-33) may have made them reluctant to question Jesus again. Only after the resurrection did they understand (Luke 24:25-27, 44-45; John 2:22). Reformed theology emphasizes that Scripture requires Spirit-illumination—objective revelation plus subjective enlightenment.

1. How does the disciples' inability to understand despite clear teaching illustrate human spiritual blindness apart from divine illumination?
2. What does their fear to ask questions teach about how pride or fear of rebuke can prevent us from seeking clarity from God?
