

Matthew 10:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you.

Analysis

Jesus explains conditional blessing: 'if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you' (καὶ εαν μεν η η οικια αξια ελθατω η ειρηνη υμων επ αυτην εαν δε μη η αξια η ειρηνη υμων προς υμας επιστραφητω). The peace offered isn't automatic but conditional on reception. 'Worthy' (αξια) means receptive, responsive, welcoming. If the household receives the messengers and message, God's peace 'comes upon' them—blessing actualized. If they reject, 'peace returns' to the messengers—blessing withdrawn. This establishes sobering reality: gospel brings either blessing or judgment depending on response. The messengers aren't diminished by rejection; the peace returns to them. But rejectors lose opportunity for blessing.

Historical Context

Ancient Jewish culture understood conditional blessing. God's covenant promises required faithful response. Jesus radicalizes this: response to His messengers determines blessing or curse. The peace offered is the kingdom's presence and salvation. Acceptance brings God's reign; rejection leaves people under judgment. Early church experienced this: some cities received them gladly (Berea, Acts 17:11), others rejected violently (Thessalonica, Acts 17:5). Paul's pattern of turning from rejecting Jews to receptive Gentiles (Acts 13:46, 18:6) follows this principle.
