

Matthew 10:40

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me.

Analysis

Jesus declares 'He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me'—establishing a profound chain of representation and authority. The verb 'receiveth' (δεχόμενος/dechomenos) means to welcome, accept, take in—not mere tolerance but genuine reception. Christ identifies so completely with His disciples that response to them is response to Him. This isn't automatic for all religious teachers but specifically for those He sends bearing His message. The double identification (disciples→Christ→Father) roots apostolic authority in divine authority itself. This provides theological grounding for why rejecting apostolic testimony constitutes rejecting God (1 Thessalonians 4:8). It also encourages missionaries: when faithful to Christ's message, they speak with His authority.

Historical Context

Jesus spoke this while commissioning the Twelve for their first independent mission (Matthew 10:5-42). In ancient Near Eastern culture, an apostle or sent-one (שְׁלִיחֵךְ/shaliach in Hebrew, ἀπόστολος/apostolos in Greek) functioned as the sender's legal representative—their words carried the sender's authority. The saying 'a man's agent is as himself' was proverbial in Jewish law. Jesus applies this principle to spiritual mission: His disciples represent Him, who represents the Father. This verse shaped the early church's understanding of apostolic authority (Acts 2:42, Ephesians 2:20). During the first century, itinerant prophets and teachers moved between churches, raising questions about which messengers deserved reception.
