

Matthew 13:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it;

Analysis

He that received the seed into stony places (ὁ ἐπὶ τὰ πετρώδη σπαρείς)—rocky ground with thin topsoil over limestone bedrock. Seed sprouts quickly in shallow soil warmed by underlying rock, creating impressive initial growth. Anon with joy receiveth it (εὐθὺς μετὰ χαρᾶς λαμβάνει αὐτόν)—euthus means 'immediately, at once.' Emotional, enthusiastic response without depth characterizes this hearer.

This describes superficial conversions—impressive external response lacking internal transformation. The 'joy' is genuine but immature, based on benefits (healing, community, emotional experience) rather than Christ Himself. Modern 'decisions for Christ' that produce no lasting change fit this category. The issue isn't the joy (which should accompany salvation, 1 Peter 1:8) but its shallowness, rooted in rocky soil incapable of sustaining growth.

Historical Context

Galilean limestone bedrock often lay just inches beneath topsoil. Farmers recognized rocky ground produced quick germination but poor harvest. Jesus's agricultural metaphor would immediately resonate—everyone knew the disappointment of promising sprouts that withered when summer heat came. This parable warns against measuring conversion success by initial enthusiasm rather than persevering fruit.
