

Matthew 13:45

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls:

Analysis

The parable 'The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls' presents another picture of the kingdom's supreme value. Unlike the accidental discovery in verse 44, this merchant actively sought pearls, representing intentional spiritual seeking. Finding 'one pearl of great price,' he sold all to buy it. This teaches that when Christ is truly encountered, all other pursuits pale in comparison. The single pearl represents Christ Himself.

Historical Context

Pearls were among antiquity's most precious gems, valued more than gold. Merchants traveled extensively seeking fine pearls. This man's expertise meant he recognized supreme value when found. His willingness to sell all demonstrated the pearl's incomparable worth.
