

Matthew 14:28

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water.

Analysis

Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water (κύριε, εἰ σὺ εἶ, κέλευσόν με ἐλθεῖν πρὸς σὲ ἐπὶ τὰ ὕδατα, kyrie, ei su ei, keleuson me elthein pros se epi ta hydata)—Peter's request mingles faith with testing. The conditional 'if it be thou' suggests lingering doubt, yet the request itself demonstrates extraordinary boldness. The word keleuson (command, order) recognizes Christ's absolute authority over natural law.

Peter alone among the Twelve had the audacity to request this miracle. His impulsive faith, though imperfect, moved him to attempt what seemed impossible. This verse captures Peter's character—passionate, impetuous, willing to risk failure rather than miss opportunity. Jesus honors such faith-filled boldness, even when tinged with human weakness.

Historical Context

This event occurred during the 'fourth watch of the night' (Matthew 14:25), between 3-6 AM, after Jesus had spent the evening in solitary prayer following the feeding of the five thousand. The Sea of Galilee, approximately 13 miles long and 7 miles wide, was known for sudden violent storms. The disciples had rowed about 3-4 miles (John 6:19), fighting contrary winds for hours. Peter's request came after hours of exhausting labor.
